Murder Confirmed in Zodiac Case

Police remain tight-lipped about the investigation into the death of Reynard Armstrong over the weekend but have confirmed they are pursuing a murder investigation. Lead investigator Vera Todd noted that no one has been detained in the case. "We're following a number of lines of inquiry but are not ready to make any arrests at this time. We do have a number of very solid leads," she added.

Last summer, Armstrong and Zodiac were the targets of a campaign of intimidation aimed at drawing attention to alleged violations of environmental law by Zodiac. A spokesperson for INNOviro stated: "Our goal is to force the government's hand, to make them enforce existing environmental legislation. We have adequate laws on the books which companies routinely disregard.

Zodiac is one of the worst. It's time the government went after these violators." At the time, activist Christian Green was arrested for stalking the victim and uttering threats. Green is presently under a court order to stay 100 metres away from Armstrong and his company. Todd would neither confirm nor deny whether Green was considered a suspect in the case.

City Council Jumps the Gun

Newoma District Council voted unanimously to endorse the City Planning Division's Riders Report and begin installing separated bike lanes connecting most parts of the city. "Our goal is to connect the downtown core with all satellite residential areas via safe traffic corridors," Newoma Mayor Lilli Ann Wong said. "Sharing the road hasn't worked. Only dedicated bike lanes will encourage people to leave their cars at home," she added. Many spectators applauded the move.

A handful of protesters showed up to oppose bike lanes. One of the most vocal, Regeant Detard, said dedicated bike lanes infringe on the constitutional rights of motorists when speaking to the motion. He was quickly booed down by other spectators in the public gallery.
